Mr Cochrane knew at once that he had made a terrible mistake to turn on the others. He was wrong to distrust them just because they were different. He had misunderstood them but that was no excuse. They were displaced people - lost and looking for a home. He was overcome with the sadness of their situation. Suddenly, he realised that he would be sad to see them depart. No, he wanted them to stay. He would do everything he could to help them rebuild their lives.

Parvaneh felt sick when she discovered that Mr Cochrane was in league with the evil Montvill. But, there was no way to rewrite history, so they would have to find a way to work together to derail Montvill's plans. Parvaneh might disagree with Mr Cochrane's beliefs, but they were on the same side now. But how could they beat Montvill? Did Montvill have some weakness that she had overlooked?
